Written and illustrated by Chris Ferrie. Then, with my father in the middle, all the little family thronged around, every one eager for the best place, and page after page was turned over, not without great reluctance in the company to part with each fading vision of beauty, and perhaps, still more hard to have come to an end, was the running commentary made by my father upon the different pictures, upon the characters represented, and upon the artists who had been the authors of the original works.

Captured

Human forces having an understanding, a will, an imagination and so on have to combine with other forces: an overall form arises from this combination, but everything depends on the nature of other forces with which the human forces become linked.
